Highland Business News/Q&A

You may have noticed the Sugar Sweet produce stand at the corner of the Kountry Korner gas station. The Highland City Council, based on a Planning Commission recommendation, recently adopted a "temporary outdoor sales ordinance" which allows a variety of outdoor businesses under certain regulations and with property owner permission. A permit is required from the City. You may see more exciting, local businesses this summer season. Much of our local business is made up of small, locally-owned home occupation businesses. The City's current business license ordinance indicates the requirements and any restrictions in operating a home occupation business, as well as other types of businesses.

A frequently asked question is "Do I need a Highland City business license?" If your business lists your home in Highland as its physical location, you must obtain a City business license. Even if business is not specifically conducted within Highland but your home address is used for registration with the State, you are required to have a license with Highland City. Prior to applying for a City business license, an individual should contact the State of Utah to ensure that all State-mandated requirements have been met. Go to the State of Utah Web site or you may also contact the State by phone at 1-877-526-3994.

Questions about the City business licensing process should be directed to the City Recorder's Office at 801-772-4506 or via email at gina@highlandcity.org

YARD of the MONTH - July 2009

Wilder Residence - 6391 W 9960 N

Greg and Mary Wilder have built an “arborous wonderland” right in their own yard. Greg, a botanist, has carefully planned the location of every plant, deck, pathway, and waterfall. Among the many plants and trees, there are two large waterfalls, one at a height of 26 ft and a naturally occurring pond during the spring and summer months. Greg’s highlight of the yard, however, is his tribute to his wife; the leaf-shaped deck in memory of their honeymoon cottage.

Johnson Residence - 9949 N Wellington Ct

Ken & Debbie Johnson and their 9 children have lived in Windsor Meadows 4½ years. The family started with $20 of seeds and a few plant starts from relatives. By harvesting the growing seeds and bulbs and replanting them in the spring, they now have a yard full of blooms. Debbie requires every plant in the yard to have flowers. Each child is assigned a portion of the yard and they willingly weed every Monday. The philosophy behind their yard is to teach the children how to work. The whole family takes pride in the beautiful result.

During the summer months, the Highland City Tree Committee reviews nominees for Yard of the Month and votes on their top picks. The next Yard of the Month will be in the Spring of 2010. A special thanks to the Tree Committee and to all participants this year!

LIBRARY NEWS!

Lone Peak Animal Control Cautions Residents To Be Aware of Rattlesnakes

In recent months, Lone Peak Animal Control has seen a sharp increase in reports of rattlesnake sightings in urban areas.

While human encounters with rattlesnakes are relatively common in the unimproved areas and foothills throughout both Highland and Alpine, the recent spreading of rattlesnakes into cities presents some concerns for public safety. According to Utah Division of Wildlife Resources, rattlesnakes are likely moving into neighborhoods and backyards as a result of the unusually wet summer.

The Great Basin Rattlesnake is Utah's most common venomous snake. These snakes are found throughout the northern regions of Utah and have a long history in the Highland-Alpine area. Historically, residents would stock pigs in the north foothills to kill the snakes and keep them from wandering into town. This is how Hog Hollow Road got its name.

Typically ranging in size from two to six feet, Animal Control stresses that rattlesnakes of any size or age can be extremely dangerous. In fact, juvenile snakes may be more dangerous as they will always inject venom with their bites while adults may conserve venom for prey.

Great Basin Rattlesnakes can easily be identified by the large black oval spinal blotches with beige borders, which are repeated down the back. These snakes usually have large, block-shaped heads with distinctive triangular-shaped eyes and have rough looking scales. Surprisingly, Great Basin Rattlesnakes may not always have a rattle, but can always be identified by a black bead at the tip of its tail.

Rattlesnakes take shelter during the hottest part of the day and typically prefer natural scrub, wooded or rocky areas, where it hides and preys on mice, small rodents and rabbits. They will also frequently inhabit abandoned rodent holes and the base line of buildings and fences. It is recommended that citizens wear protective footwear and clothing when working outdoors. Be aware that snakes can be anywhere – in the bush or backyard, especially vegetable patches, between rocks and under rubbish. Particular caution should be taken during the late evening hours and dusk as temperatures cool off and snakes are the most active.

"All rattlesnakes should be admired from a safe distance," says reptile expert, Jim Dix of Reptile Rescue Services of Salt Lake. Great Basin Rattlesnakes can strike at a distance up to two-thirds of their body length. If you encounter a rattlesnake, DO NOT attempt to approach or kill it.

While these animals should be respected, Animal Control urges citizens not to overreact, but recommends that the community be aware of the danger so that adequate precautions can be taken. "The irony is that most snake bites occur while humans are attempting to kill them," notes Dix.

Contrary to myth, rattlesnakes are not aggressive and will not chase humans. However when threatened, a rattlesnake does not always rattle before it bites and can strike faster than any human can react.

Moreover, Great Basin Rattlesnakes are classified as non-game animals and are protected by Utah state laws. Killing one is a Class B misdemeanor and can carry with it a fine of $1,200 and or six months in jail.

For the dangers that the snakes may present, they play an important role in the environment, serving as prey for many native birds and helping to regulate rodent populations, which spread 35 known human diseases.

Great Basin Rattlesnake populations have declined steadily in recent decades due to habitat loss, road mortality, and killing by people. "It's a sad reality that these creatures are going extinct because of our own fear and ignorance, when in reality, most snakes are more interested in escaping from humans than injuring them," says Dix.

For further questions regarding abatement in your area or to report a rattlesnake, contact Lone Peak Police Department Division of Animal Control at (801) 756-9800.

Scott Eatchel
